Today at 8:00 AM UTC, the world witnessed the official launch of Daily 27, a groundbreaking daily newspaper dedicated to advancing the principles of human rights through journalism. Appropriately launched on the International Day for Universal Access to Information, Daily 27 draws its name and mission from Article 27 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states: “Everyone has the right to freely participate in the cultural life of the community, to enjoy the arts, and to share in scientific advancement and its benefits.”

This unique publication aims to provide insightful and in-depth reporting that connects people with the latest advancements in science and culture, ensuring access to crucial information in line with the right to knowledge and participation in modern societal developments.

The virtual presentation introduced Daily 27 to a global audience, showcasing its innovative approach to journalism that prioritizes scientific and cultural integrity. Attendees had the chance to learn about the newspaper’s mission and vision, engage with its editorial team, and explore how this new platform will serve as a beacon of free, accurate, and accessible information for all.
